That makes our bitters sweet. We never squabble with our cooks. Nor anger these men at all. For when the old pack has nearly broken your back There's joy in the old mess call.

We have won fame, I have said before. We will soldier until we are free. And store our troubles away with the old mess kit.

With no doubt a dream every now and then, For there are dangers on every hand. But we will never forget, while we live, you bet, The mess line in no man's land.
